How to Use the Table Below:

We've listed more than 150 of our favorite "go-to" props when betting the Super Bowl below. We've done all the research for you -- now it's just time to find the right lines! Here's what each column means:

Play: Our recommended side of the prop

Our Odds: Using our research, this is what the true moneyline should be for this prop. For an understanding of moneylines, read here.

Line to Look For: When looking to place a wager on this prop, this is bare minimum line you should look for. On many occasions, you'll get a line better than our Line to Look For. Do not place a wager on this prop unless you get at least this line.

When to Buy: During an event as big as the Super Bowl, tons of money from the general public comes in on props in the last couple of days before the game. Their mindset never changes, and the public always bets the same of props each Super Bowl no matter which teams are playing. We can use this to our advantage by waiting to get a better line if we know we'll be on the other side of the public. The three options here are ASAP (this line will likely move against us, bet it now while you can if the line is right), When Available (keep checking throughout the week, when it's available, hit it), and Game Day (day of the Super Bowl, as that's when we'll likely have a better line even if the Line to Look For is already there).

Note: Some props are essentially betting the same thing -- for example, betting Sony Michel number of receptions, receiving yards, and first reception, are all hinging on one thing (him catching a pass). Unless you want tons of exposure, just pick your favorite prop in that group and bet it. Otherwise, you'll end up with 3X exposure on a single outcome.

For any questions, reach out to us. Good luck!
